

- Over half of HIV negative MSM interviewed have been sexually active with partners outside their households while COVID-19 restrictions were in place.
- Loneliness, sense of isolation and anxiety were widely reported as factors contributing towards having sex against the lockdown recommendations.
- 36% of the interviewed accessed sexual health services during lockdown and 28% reported a STI diagnosis during this time.